NEOKLASIKA'S UNIQUE and tailored interiors represent a finely tuned balance between the site and its context, functionality, aesthetical values and concept, with the fusion of these elements achieving true timelessness.

Adapting classic interiors to modern lifestyle requirements is a challenge approached with aplomb and aesthetic judgement, but also with an eye to perfect functionality.

Clients value the attention to detail and multi-faceted approach to the design process, driving the project from just an idea all the way to perfect execution. The practice offers a vast range of competences, from conceptualisation to realisation, and the highly personalised service has paid dividends – Neoklasika has been established for more than two decades.

The individual approach extends to selecting suppliers. Creating unique spaces means working with small niche companies that have craftsmanship pedigree and experience to match, as well as sustainable approach and high technical standards. Ultimately the aesthetical goals of each project determine the selection.

A key element of Neoklasika design is partnering with artists, with most projects featuring individually created artworks, from paintings to murals to glasswork, to name a few. This reflects the partners' belief that there should be no hard line distinction between interior design and art.

Wood, marble/stone floors seem to be a recurrent theme in Neoklasika interiors. The partners use sustainable noble materials of timeless character and high aesthetic value. Concrete, steel and glass are also used when the concept requires it.

One of the firm's most significant projects and perhaps most representative of Neoklasika's style is Project Home Sweet Home in that it showcases the synergy between the partners' design philosophy and the clients' brief. The design team was invited to implement their idea of a home as an oasis of serenity and comfort; the eminently mobile owners' brief was that the home coming should be filled with anticipation and joy.

The focal point of the interior concept was creating and enhancing the link to the exterior and surrounding nature. Located on the coastline of the Baltic Sea, the residence allows the ever-changing landscape to flow in through large windows. Inspired by nature and the vertical elegance of art-deco heritage, each design element has been created to reflect these principles through its shape, colour and material. The resulting interior is one where creativity meets with exceptional technical performance.

The concept, design and detailing are in a finely tuned synch with the owners' personality on one hand and with the surrounding environment on the other. A distinctive range of natural materials has been used to create a nuanced interaction between all interior elements, with Neoklasika supervising every stage of realisation.

The design studio went as far as staging an artist competition for the rugs design and for custom-made joinery. Speciality lighting manufacturers were also commissioned.

Neoklasika's tailored approach and unerring aesthetic judgement have left a distinctive mark on a number of highly individual and often quirky projects.
